Copyright and Conference Presentations
Library Brown Bag Series, April 10, 2019 (R. Graham)

Do you need permission to use someone else’s work in your conference presentation, poster, paper, posting or handout?

1. Is the material copyrighted?
2. If you are using an excerpt, is it a “substantial part” of the whole work?
3. Do you need to reproduce the material, or can you use a link instead?
4. Is your use covered by an applicable Creative Commons, open access or other license?
5. Is your use covered by a users’ right such as fair dealing under the Copyright Act?
6. If you are relying on a statutory users’ right, is the source you are using non-infringing or did you circumvent a technological protection measure to access the work?
7. If you are using a reproduction or recording (print or digital, offline or online), do you have reasonable grounds to believe it was copied or made publicly available with the copyright owner’s consent?
8. If permission is needed and contingent on fee payment or some other condition(s), have you paid the fee or met the condition(s)?

Fair Dealing Analytical Framework in Canada (CCH v LSUC, 2004 SCC 13)

Step 1: Does a statutory fair dealing purpose apply? (research, private study, education, parody, satire, criticism, review, news reporting)

Step 2: Is the copying, on the whole, fair, with respect to

- Purpose: ultimate (end-user’s) purpose? real motive for copying? commercial or non-commercial purpose?
- Character: single or multiple copies? wide or narrow distribution? customary trade or industry practice? copy destroyed after use?
- Amount: is the whole work copied, or just a (substantial) part?
- Alternatives: could a non-copyrighted equivalent be used to achieve the same ultimate purpose?
- Nature of the work: confidential? unpublished? if not confidential, is there a public interest in wider dissemination?
- Effect: is the copy likely to compete with or be a substitute for the original work?
